I study how consumers resolve competing ethical, sensory, and social motivations when making food and sustainability-related choices, and what this means for product positioning, marketing communication, and category adoption. My work combines experimental design with psychophysiological methods, published in leading consumer psychology and marketing journals.

RESEARCH EXPERIENCE

- 2023-2026 Ecuador country lead, REMAP (MRC-funded): I supervised data collection from start to finish. During pilot excursions, I trained research assistants in field research and the use of a codebook, oversaw data collection (in-store observations & photos) on marketing and sales practices in 500 retail stores in Quito. Managed logistics, ensured protocol adherence and data quality control.
- 2022-2026 I conducted quantitative food psychology studies in the USFQ NeuroLab. Designed & executed EEG (EMOTIV hardware) and eye-tracking (Tobii hardware) experiments. Performed evaluation research of moral food choices & sensory food satisfaction.
- 2019-2026 For quantitative sensory food satisfaction research on diverse proteins (meat, plant-based, insects), I prepare experiments for panels to evaluate sensory attributes, consumer liking and purchase intent. These studies provide insight into the moral trade-offs among proteins from non-human animals, plant-based alternatives, and insect-derived proteins.
- 2017 A LGBTQIA+ coming-out and appearance victimization study (University of Hawaii CTAHR grant) used qualitative methods. I was responsible for participant recruitment, scheduling and conducting participant interviews. Additionally, I was charged with ethnographic photography & data organization. I was responsible for the thematic analysis of transcripts and the coding of visual content of photographs.

TEACHING EXPERIENCE

Graduate Courses (MBA Program)

- Since 2016 Digital Marketing: In this core course – focused on digital advertising, web analytics, and development of engaging content – I use case studies and simulations to viscerally highlight the importance of data-based decision-making.
- Marketing Strategy for Managers: I assign students to lead discussions on marketing mix, segmentation, targeting & positioning. With careful selection and discussion of case studies, I emphasize the application of marketing frameworks for effective decision-making.
- Comparative Management Systems: This course thrives on student diversity and cross-cultural experiences, which are crucial for global business. I select and implement activity and scenario-based learning modules to hone students' intercultural communication skills.

Business Communication: In this course, I had many positive experiences with a flipped classroom approach, where students prepare presentations in competing teams that evaluate each other. I provide background personalized coaching.

Select Undergraduate Courses

Since 2011

Marketing for A Better World: I developed this cross-disciplinary, writing-intensive seminar based on my research interests. It integrates sustainability principles, conscious consumerism and economic principles of ecosystem valuation. I challenge students to critically explore the transformative power of (social) marketing. Through the lens of ethical frameworks, academic publications, case studies, and practical applications, I hope to inspire students to leverage marketing as a force for positive social and environmental change.

Digital Business and E-Commerce: I employ project-based learning with simulations in areas like AI marketing and product launches.

Management of Retail Buying: I utilize simulations for the management of virtual stores, applying dynamic pricing and assortment strategies. I incorporated debates and negotiation exercises to hone students' decision-making abilities.

Consumer Behavior: In this course, I guide students to uncover the psychological and sociological forces that drive consumer decisions. I employ an experimental and laboratory-based approach, moving beyond theory to direct application. Students learn to evaluate persuasion techniques through experiments like blind tests and identify consumer profiles using qualitative methods such as focus groups. The curriculum is built around designing and conducting an original consumer behavior experiment, challenging students to test hypotheses and synthesize their findings into practical tools like empathy maps, thereby bridging the gap between academic concepts and real-world marketing challenges.

Market Research: I designed this course to transform students into proficient, critical practitioners of marketing research. It is a hands-on, project-based journey where students learn to formulate research problems, design studies, and apply advanced statistical analyses to derive actionable insights. I emphasize the use of modern, open-source tools like JASP and PsychoPy for data collection and hypothesis testing. Through active participation in the NeuroLab and a comprehensive final research project, students gain practical experience in the entire research process, preparing them to support data-driven strategic decision-making in a business environment.
